

Precision medicine conference to take place Sept. 12-13

Aug. 21, 2018—Precision medicine strategies and successes in improving patient outcomes are key themes when hospital and health network CEOs and administrators gather in Nashville Sept. 12-13 to hear from innovators at Vanderbilt University Medical Center, Geisinger Health, Northwell Health, Moffitt Cancer Center, and Seattle Children's Hospital, among others.

"Precision Medicine for Hospital CEOs: What You Need to Know about Genetic Testing, Precision Medicine, and Population Health Management" (<https://www.precisionmedicineforhospitals.com>) will feature first-mover and early-adopter health networks sharing the strategies of their precision medicine programs and the patient care successes and outcomes.

Keynote speaker is Jeffery Balser, MD, PhD, CEO of Vanderbilt University Medical Center, which is internationally recognized for its pioneering efforts to bring precision medicine into daily clinical care. Attendees will gain insight into the early successes of precision medicine at Vanderbilt and learn how the health care big data base at Vanderbilt is being used to inform population health initiatives while also guiding the care clinicians provide daily.

Twenty speakers will share their experiences at bringing precision medicine, genetic medicine, and genetic testing into the daily care provided to patients.
